Description

The Scarlino Marshes develops in the area of what remains of the old Portus Scabris. It covers an area of about 155 hectares of wildlife protection oases.

It is possible to walk in the marshes thanks to wooden walkways and it is like returning to the Maremma of the 800, before the reclamation. The Marshes are located along the migration routes of birds and are the ideal place for these animals to stop and nest.

The Scarlino Marshes, once a large and healthy coastal lake, today presents itself as a protected area of international naturalistic importance (Ramsar convention), which can be visited through a wooden walkway, with observation huts for birdwatching.
